teel industry union, the Iron Confederation, has reaffirmed to prevent the recognition of unions by the British Steel the union's monthly journal Man questioned the qualifications of court of inquiry set up by Mrs vestigate the disputes over BSC's ecognition to the Clerical and kers' Union and the Association al and Managerial Staffs.

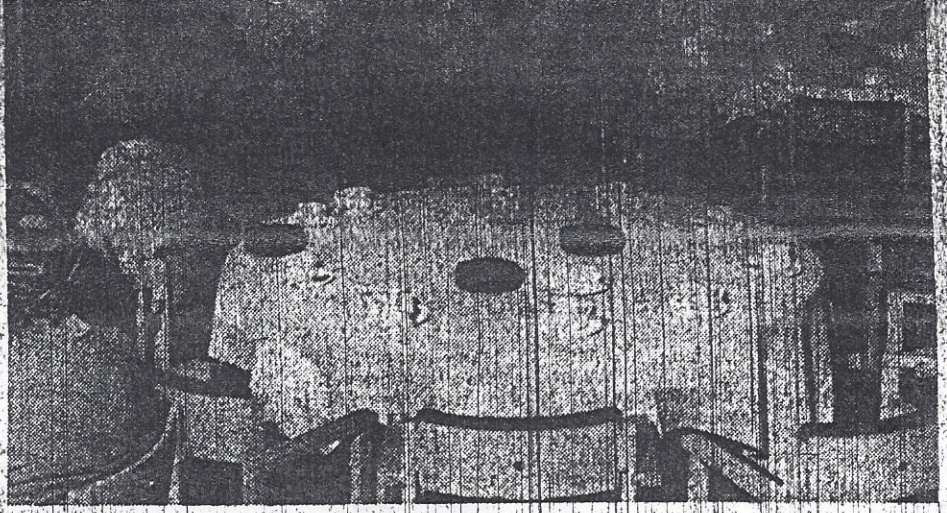
ISTC general secretary, Mr Dai Davies, has spoken of a three-month strike or an attempt to bring down the Government—the union said: "It is surely a strange thing that in a situation where industrial action, when taken by ASTMS and CAWU, is not only uncondemned but is rewarded, the ISTC is expected to remain indifferent to the moral which is to be drawn from the experience and is asked by the court to act with their traditional responsibility, co-operation and forbearance."

The confederation has always believed that in industrial relations the force of argument is more intelligent and potent a weapon than the argument of force "but we have never believed in peace at any price and in the situation today, where even the Government and courts of inquiry appear to react to force instead of argument, can we reasonably be expected to ignore the implications?"



There were many empty seats at the afternoon showing of the Hallam Conservative Women's Association fashion show, held in the Grosvenor Hotel yesterday, as this picture shows.

Few turn up for Tory fashion show

By JANET PRICE

Only a handful of people turned up for Hallam Women Conservatives' first fund-raising fashion show held yesterday in Sheffield.

Forty people out of an expected audience of 250 attended the afternoon show, but although the organisers were "very disappointed" at the poor turnout, they are optimistic that they will reach their £1,900 quota for the £2 million Conservative national appeal launched last March.

About 600 tickets were printed for the two-part fashion show. Attendance figures at the evening show showed a great improvement, when 150 people attended.

Mrs John Osborn, wife of the MP for Hallam opening the show said: "It is disappointing that there are not more people here. The show has clashed with three or four other events in Sheffield.

"This is a special year for Conservatives who are trying to raise £2 million. I have not heard that they have got it yet, so I hope everyone will make contributions in order to fight the next election," she said.

Hallam Women Conservatives have to raise the £1,900 by next March, and for the last six months have held supper dances and buffet luncheons and have raised about a half of this amount.

This was the first time they had held a fashion show on a divisional basis organised by the nine women's branches within the division.

Charity

Mrs Jean Hawkswell, chairman of the Hallam Division, said after the show: "We have to raise this money for the national appeal, but in addition we have municipal election expenses besides our own expenses.

"We sold quite a lot of tickets for this show, but people just have not turned out. There was a charity show on at the same time as the afternoon show, and people will always support charity rather than a political party.

"However, we are optimistic that we shall reach the target we have been set."

Future of mosque still not settled

Morning Telegraph Reporter

The legal tussle between opposing groups of the Sheffield Pakistani community over whether their mosque in Darnall can be sold was not resolved at a county court hearing yesterday. It will come up again in December.

Adjourning the case part-heard to a date to be fixed, Judge Arnold explained, "The lists are very full indeed, and it looks as though December will be the next convenient date, unless something happens to give us a free day in the meantime."

Mr. Mohammed Nur, Mr. Mohammed Sadiq Malik and Mr. Mohammed Aslam—who were said to represent a section of the city's 5,000 Pakistani Moslems—sought damages and a perpetual injunction preventing the mosque, in Industry Road, from being sold. The defendants were four trustees.

Purported sale

Mr. Peter Baker, for the plaintiffs, said the case arose because the mosque had been closed late last year, and a purported sale had been made by four trustees.

Alleging that in offering the mosque for sale, the trustees had acted without proper regard for the beneficiaries of the trust, which included the Pakistani Moslem community as a whole, Mr Baker said the agreed purchase price of £1,200 was less than had been paid when the mosque was bought by public subscription in 1962.

According to a declaration of trust, he claimed, the mosque could not be sold without a meeting of the congregation and the approval of the Pakistani Moslem Association. Only two small notices, handwritten in Urdu, announced the sale, no meeting had been called to discuss the Master Cutler, Mr Gilbert Willis, condemning his "scurrilous" reference to the forthcoming strike in his installation speech on Wednesday.

Mr Willis said that by supporting the claim, the engineering unions were pandering to "naked greed" and that the unions had not informed their members of the employers' offer.

The shop stewards did not consider they were greedy in asking for a basic wage of £13 5s. for skilled men to be increased. They were also satisfied they had been kept informed.
