They have now decided to drop their request because the hall is used by teenagers—some of them under 18—who are members of the John F. Kennedy Youth Centre. The club has its headquarters in the hall.

The scheme was originally put forward to help raise funds for the parish.

highest in Britain.

Coun. Roland Poole said the fares worked out at twice the train fare and Coun. Mrs. Elizabeth Yorke claimed it was cheaper to go by taxi than by bus on one route.

The council were discussing a proposal by the Lincolnshire Road Car Co. who operate the bus services, to apply to the East Midlands Traffic Commissioners for a fares increase.

Coun. Charles Carswell said he was concerned about the effect of the fares on pensioners. With fares so high it was quite an event for some old people to get a trip into town. He thought the company ought to let the old have concessionary fares.

The council agreed to appoint representatives to attend the hearing when the company's application is considered.

holiday period, a police spokesman said yesterday.

Although New Year's Eve figures have, still to be released the number of breath tests taken over the Christmas period was 66, the spokesman said.

Three drivers refused to take the tests and of those taken 28 proved positive.

In Barnsley where three tests were made over Christmas—all positive — a police spokesman said that none had been made on New Year's Eve.

In Sheffield there were only three breathalyser tests in the period covered by New Year celebrations — and they all proved negative.

reluctant to give it up. Petrol sales at one London garage have increased by 50 per cent. since the cigarette offer was introduced.

Mr. Roy Egginton, managing director of Carmyles, said his business had increased but it was too early to say exactly by how much. "But we have seen a lot of strange faces coming in for petrol," he added. No-one had objected to the scheme.

In the past Total have offered steak knives and forks with petrol and at the end of last year they distributed 50,000 breathalysers and 20,000 cut-price seat-belts to customers.

A spokesman for the council said: "This project will be welcomed by everyone. We hope it will end our problem.

"At times the fall-out has been terrific.

The council's protests were reported to Newark Rural Council, who asked the town's MP, Mr. Ted Bishop, to take up the matter. He told them yesterday that the new equipment would soon be in use.

A power station spokesman said part of the work was already under way and the rest would be put out to tender.

"We are sorry about this increase in fall-out but this new equipment will, we hope, solve the problem," he added.

Mosque 'sale' mystery

Morning Telegraph Reporter

As hundreds of Sheffield Moslems celebrate the end of the month-long fast of Ramadan at their Bodmin Street Mosque today, the fate of the older Sheffield mosque in Industry Road remains uncertain.

Some of the Pakistani trustees of the property claim that the "sale" of the mosque has been finalised but solicitors in possession of the deeds say they know nothing about it.

The group of Pakistanis who tried to enter the mosque on Sunday continued to maintain last night that to sell a mosque was a grave breach of Moslem law. They have now sought English legal advice to try to stop the sale.

Yesterday Mrs. Ali Hedar, of Elmham Road, Darnall, wife of one of the trustees, said: "It has been definitely sold to Mrs. Kamida Din, my husband's niece."

Asked how long ago the sale had taken place Mrs. Hedar said: "About three months but I can't be sure. She has moved in some of her furniture.

"The place is no longer a mosque. Last January the mosque committee handed it over to the trustees to take charge of, and the trustees decided to sell it."

Another trustee, and president of the Sheffield Pakistani Moslem Association, Mr. Karam Dad, of Attercliffe Common, explained the reason for selling, yesterday.

"We want to raise money for the new mosque in Bodmin Street. In Industry Road that house is not a proper place for prayer.

"The new place cost us £3,000." Mr. Dad said he could not be sure how much money had been realised by the "sale" of the old mosque. He thought it was about £300.

But Neal Scorah Siddons and Co., the Sheffield solicitors who have the deeds of the old mosque, said they knew nothing of the sale. A spokesman for the firm said last night: "I have been in contact with Mr. and Mrs. Hedar and there has been no sale yet.

"I had a telephone call from one of the trustees who said that he wouldn't agree to it."

The property cannot legally be sold if this trustee does not agree as five trustees are required to complete a deal and two returned to Pakistan some time ago, the spokesman explained.

One of the group of Pakistanis who tried to enter the old mosque on Sunday, Mr. Mohammed Nur, a businessman, of Grange Crescent, Ecclesall, said last night: "I have contacted our solicitors and asked them to get in touch with Neal Scorah Siddons to prevent the sale.

"My information is that three trustees are now out of the country."

Five burned in house fire

Five people were taken to hospital with burns last night after a fire at a house in Colville Street, Nottingham.

Two children were rescued from the house by neighbours and two adults were got down from upper floors by firemen using ladders. It is though that nobody was seriously injured.
